Our Great Pre-Inventory

Sale of Men's and Young

Men's Fine Clothing.

Continues until Christmas, and from then, just one week more until we shall take inventory and close our year's business. In spite of the low prices of cattle and the consequent general depression, every department in our store shows an increase in sales. We are thankful for this increased patronage and want to make the last few weeks in 1903, the banner weeks of the year. We have made a cut of 20 per cent in the price of our Ladies' Suits and more than tripled our sales for the last ten days in this department. We are doing the same in our Men's Clothing department, and in the same way, from now until New Year. We think a

Special Discount of 20 per cent on every men's and young men's suits in the house will accomplish the object. We have reserved none except black suits. Everything else goes with a reduction of 20 per cent.

SEARCH FOR RENEGADES.

May be Fought With Bandits
in Mexico by Determined Officers.

—Post-Dispatch.
Naco, Ariz., Dec. 8.—American prospectors who have just returned from the Bocoachi country in Sonora bring word of the recent raid upon the towns and ranches of that section by a Mexican outlaw named Sanchez, who, with his band of renegades, is still at large and is believed to have crossed the line into Arizona.

Sanchez was at one time a wealthy Mexican rancher and owned large herds of cattle ranging in the Bocoachi country. He became involved in trouble and was thrown into a Mexican prison. While serving his term of five years he turned over his property to his brother-in-law. When he finally regained his liberty it was to find his ranch in the possession of a stranger and all his cattle sold to surrounding ranchers.

He demanded satisfaction of his brother-in-law, who lived in Bocoachi, who paid no attention to his threats and drove him out of the place. Sanchez fled to the mountains, where he fell in with a band of renegades. He resolved to make use of them to bring his brother-in-law to terms, and at their head rode into Bocoachi with a dozen men, and before the store of his brother-in-law, commanded him to make good the property he stolen. No attention was paid to his threats, and the band at once began to "shoot up" the town.

The brother-in-law was killed in the fight and then Sanchez fled with his band to the mountains. They took a trail leading to the north and were followed by a band of rurales. All trace of the renegades was for some time lost, when they turned up at George Dunn's ranch, in the Ajo mountains, and having raided it, fled again toward the north, always robbing ranches when in need of food and fresh horses.

The authorities at Cananea were notified and all the rurales in the section united. But the officers were in no hurry to engage in a fight with Sanchez, and when the rendezvous where the fight was supposed to take place was reached Sanchez and his men had fled.

The bandits were next seen by a Mexican crossing the line. The party had dwindled to eight men, but all were well mounted and heavily armed. The rurales in the section where they were seen are searching for the party, and another fight seems inevitable.
